¹ As a result of its bias to Europe, the fund will tend to perform well versus peers when European securities and currencies outperform. The opposite will also be true when European securities underperform other regions.

■ Manager commentary

Two key forces were behind the performance of markets in April. On the one hand, economic fundamentals appeared to weaken, with forward looking indicators deteriorating in the US, Europe and China. On the other, central bank liquidity provided considerable support for asset prices. On balance this latter effect appeared to outweigh the deteriorating picture with regards to global growth, with the result that markets made further progress during the month. However, as with March, there was a marked difference in performance both between and within asset classes. Developed market equities continued to rally, with the MSCI World index adding 0.5% in April. Most markets posted decent gains, but it was Japan who once again set the pace, with the Topix index rising sharply (plus 12.6% in yen terms) to bring its year to date return to over 36%. The most significant development in April was the decision by the Bank of Japan to engage in full scale quantitative easing. The market was surprised by the scale of the action, with the Bank of Japan unveiling the largest easing programme seen to date. All four of the world's major central banks are now engaged in ultra loose monetary policy. Any longer term concerns about the implications of this unprecedented policy action appear to have been sidelined for now, given more immediate concerns over slower global growth and high unemployment. The US remains the best performing of the major economies by some margin, although it appears that fiscal tightening measures introduced at the beginning of the year are now beginning to have an effect on the real economy. Parts of Europe, on the other hand, remain mired in recession, whilst forward indicators are also deteriorating in the core states, including Germany. Overall, markets have enjoyed a strong run in the past nine months and increasingly appear due a period of consolidation. Whilst massive liquidity continues to underpin asset prices, economic fundamentals will need to improve if today's bull market is to be sustained.

With the majority of asset classes posting gains in April, the Harmony Euro Balanced Fund returned 0.7% in euro terms. From an asset allocation perspective, the fund's allocation to global equities benefitted performance, along with the holdings in property securities and infrastructure securities, both of which outperformed the broader equity market. Within the fixed income portion of the fund, the decision to allocate money away from government bonds and towards various parts of the credit spectrum was once again rewarded over the month. The fund remains underweight to government bonds, as we do not see compelling valuations available in this area of the fixed income markets. Reasonable value can still be found, however, in investment grade, convertible and high yield debt, although these assets are becoming less attractive as their prices continue to rise. As a result, we have elected to increase the fund's exposure to strategic bond managers over time. Overall, while a welcome degree of optimism appears to be returning to the markets, it is worth bearing in mind that there are still significant risks for investors to contend with in the medium term, including the possibility of downside data surprises and policy shocks. Whilst governments in developed markets remain committed to extraordinarily loose monetary policy, it is only as a result of the difficult economic backdrop. Consequently, while we are cautiously optimistic about the prospects for markets over the medium term, investors should look to retain a prudent level of diversification in their portfolios and be careful to avoid complacency.

From a manager selection perspective Jupiter European Special Situations, managed by Cédric de Fonclare in London, returned -0.1% in euro terms during April, underperforming European equities which rose by 2.3%. Year to date Jupiter have outperformed by 0.8%, with a return of 8.8%. Key contributors to the portfolio's year to date performance include consumer and health care-related stocks, which have led the way from other sectors over the period. Cedric continues to invest in companies that he believes can benefit from the theme of the 'strong-getting-stronger' and which offer exposure to international growth. He adds diversification by investing across a range of different themes, and aims to avoid exposure to political and regulatory risks. Approximately two thirds of the portfolio is allocated to stocks listed in Germany, Switzerland and France.
