Manager commentary

The sell-off that started in late May continued through June, with nearly all asset classes suffering sharp falls. In a busy month for data and news, there were two key developments for investors to contend with; namely, US central bank 'tapering' and the apparent slowdown in Chinese growth. The market's already acute concern about tapering was heightened following the Federal Open Market Committee's (Fed's) meeting during the third week of the month, with Chairman Ben Bernanke sounding a hawkish note. In light of broadly encouraging data from the economy, the Fed announced that tapering of its asset purchase programme would start before the end of 2013 and end by mid 2014 if the economy continues on its current path. The market took this to mean that tapering would start in a matter of months, triggering a rush to sell bonds and other asset classes that have been the big beneficiaries of central bank liquidity. The Fed emphasised, however, that its final decision on tapering will be entirely data dependent, meaning that if the economy slows the central bank stands ready to increase asset purchases and/or delay any planned tapering. In China, evidence continues to mount that the economy is undergoing a significant slowdown, with export growth falling to 1% in May, inflation lower at 2.1% and slippage in both industrial production growth and retail sales. The issue which is likely to have by far the biggest impact on markets in coming months, however, is the decision to be made at the Fed over reducing the rate of quantitative easing (QE). Given that the reason for tapering will be an improving economy, which should bode well for the corporate sector, equities seem to be better supported than bonds in the current environment.

The Harmony Euro Balanced fund returned -2.7% in June, net of all fees. Over the past twelve months the fund has returned 10.4%. As a major recipient of QE flows, the government bond market is clearly highly sensitive to talk around 'tapering', and treasuries duly sold off in June with yields rising across the curve. Overall, global bonds returned -1.3% in euro terms during June, while global equities returned -3.2%. Stocks in Europe ex UK returned -4.9% to underperform global equity markets. From an asset allocation perspective our decision to allocate money away from government bonds and towards various parts of the credit spectrum was not rewarded last month, as spread widening resulted in these assets underperforming their government counterparts. Overall, we see the current pause in markets as being a normal and healthy development considering the strength of the equity rally since the middle of last year. While we are cautiously optimistic about the prospects for markets over the medium term, investors should look to retain a prudent level of diversification in their portfolios. The recent pullback in markets provides a reasonable buying opportunity and we are working to identify the best long term valuation opportunities.

From a manager selection perspective, Jupiter European Special Situations declined by 2.9% during June, whilst nonetheless outperforming European equities which fell by the higher 4.9%. Over twelve months the strategy has returned 23.8%, again outperforming the benchmark's return of 19.9%. Although the manager has been selectively adding exposure to the financial sector in recent months, he continues to avoid the highest risk areas within the region, including Southern European stocks, domestically-focused companies and low quality financials. The portfolio continues to consist of an internationally-led collection of high quality businesses with a bias towards large and mid caps, with minimal exposure to mega caps. More recently the manager has increased cyclical exposure by adding to positions in stocks such as Continental, Schneider Electric, ING and BNP Paribas.
