<sup>1</sup> As a result of its bias to Europe, the fund will tend to perform well versus peers when European securities and currencies outperform. The opposite will also be true when European securities underperform other regions.

■ Manager commentary

September brought with it a return to form for global markets following a nervous August. The tension over possible military intervention in Syria largely dissipated in September, as a number of western states stepped back from earlier rhetoric. The market was surprised by the Federal Open Markets Committee's (the Fed's) decision to delay starting to taper its Quantitative Easing (QE) programme. From the moment the Fed proposed tapering QE it has clearly been contingent on the strength of US economic data. It is somewhat paradoxical to see a strong equity market performance in a month where the subtext suggests that the economic recovery of the world's largest economy is not quite as strong as had been hoped. Ultimately, however, market fundamentals and economics are not the same thing. We believe that, in a world where QE tapering becomes a reality, there will be a return to fundamentally driven markets with genuinely undervalued asset classes likely to be rewarded compared to those that are fair value or expensive.

The Harmony Euro Balanced fund returned 1.3% in September. Over the past twelve months the fund has returned 8.6% net of all fees. The global aggregate bond market returned -0.7% in September, while global stocks returned 2.4% in euro terms as a strong local currency provided a headwind to global investment returns. Whilst the fund's asset allocation policy displayed mixed results over the month, decisions to avoid government bonds in favour of various aspects of the credit markets and the choice to underweight global property securities in favour of global listed infrastructure benefitted as these assets outperformed. On the other hand, in a month where government bonds increased in value, the fund's overweight position in cash negatively impacted relative performance.

Going forward, with uncertainty remaining over the solidity and pace of the strength of developed world economic growth, combined with a potentially tightening credit conditions, investors should look to retain a prudent level of diversification in their portfolios. This is especially the case given the growing concern over certain parts of the global emerging markets and the impact that any QE tapering may have there. Further potential issues in the short term include the US sequestration and potential political intransigence over the debt ceiling.

From a manager selection perspective, Henderson European Special Situations gained 7.2% in euro terms during the third quarter, lagging the MSCI Europe ex UK index's return of 9.9%. Over twelve months, however, the fund has marginally outperformed its index, delivering a return of 22.7% in euro terms. The London based investment team, led by Richard Pease, maintain their long held bias towards high quality and well managed businesses with a high proportion of recurring earnings, from servicing for example, while avoiding higher risk cyclicals. Recently the manager has taken advantage of opportunities to initiate positions in Nestle, Zurich Financial and Nordea at attractive valuations, whilst selling down positions in outperforming holdings such as Kone and Fugro. The portfolio is managed in an entirely benchmark agnostic fashion and displays a strong bias towards small and mid cap stocks. From a sector allocation perspective the main concentrations are in the industrial, material and consumer service sectors, with underweight allocations towards banks, telecoms and utilities compared to the broader market. On a geographical basis the fund is overweight the Nordics and Switzerland with minimal direct exposure to southern Europe.
