¹ As a result of its bias to the United States, the fund will tend to perform well versus peers when US securities (including the dollar) outperform. The opposite will also be true when US securities underperform other regions.

■ Manager commentary

Markets in October were dominated by events in the US. In the first half of the month the focus was entirely on the political impasse on the Federal budget negotiations; the gulf between Republican and Democrat politicians leading to a failure to agree on a budget deal for the new fiscal year starting on October 1 and a resultant shutdown of non essential Government functions. The US debt ceiling then needed to be raised by midmonth to prevent it being breached, which could have caused a technical default by the Government. While only a very small risk, markets were worried about the negotiations because of the increasingly extreme and intransigent views and the resultant dysfunctional state of US politics, as well as the massive impact globally that an event of this magnitude would have. In the event the politicians agreed on a last minute deal, enabling the government to reopen for business on October 17 although it was only a short term compromise, with the Government funded until January 15 and the debt ceiling raised until February 7 2014.

After sharp falls early in the month, the market became more confident that a deal would be struck and rallied strongly from the second week. Investors concluded that the negative impact to GDP growth as a result of the 17 day Government shutdown, together with the potential hit to business and consumer confidence, would delay the Fed's tapering decision. Many investors also concluded that the Fed would not risk tapering ahead of the next round of budget and debt ceiling negotiations which will conclude only in early February, so no tapering until March has almost become the market consensus. This view was strengthened with Obama's nomination of Janet Yellen as the next Fed Chair, to succeed Bernanke in January 2014. While widely expected, the appointment confirms a continuation of a dovish approach in the Fed to monetary policy, with Yellen the most dovish of the likely candidates for the position.

The Harmony US Dollar Growth Fund returned 2.6% in October. Over the past twelve months the Fund has returned 18.0% net of all fees. The global aggregate bond market returned 0.8% in October, while global stocks returned 3.9% in US dollar terms. The Fund's asset allocation policy had mixed results last month, with our decision to avoid government bonds in favour of various aspects of the credit markets benefitting performance as these assets in aggregate outperformed sovereign paper. However, the Fund is overweight cash, and in a month where government bonds increase in value an overweight cash holding negatively impacts relative performance. The Fund is neutral to global equity and while this aided absolute performance it did not provide return enhancement. Finally the Fund is underweight to global property securities which enjoyed a strong month, but this underweight was mitigated by the exposure to global listed infrastructure.

Going forward, with uncertainty remaining over the solidity and pace of developed world economic growth, combined with the potential for tightening credit conditions, investors should look to retain a prudent level of diversification in their portfolios. While political issues in the US and Europe have fallen from the headlines for now, there remain significant risks – especially in the latter region – that remain unresolved. Overall, we believe that the Fund is well positioned to take advantage of future opportunities in the markets as they present themselves.

From a manager selection perspective, our US equity managers underperformed in October, although year to date gains remain very strong in absolute terms while Wells and Harris have both outperformed the S&P 500 index over the year. Wells returned 4.0% over the month and are up by 28.5% year to date, compared to 4.6% and 24.7% respectively for the S&P 500. The manager, based in Milwaukee, looks to invest in companies with sustainable growth and to capitalise on opportunities that arise when a 'gap' exists between their assessment of a company's future growth and the market's expectations. Although their growth biased approach struggled at the start of the year, in part due to the outperformance of higher income areas of the market, their style has been rewarded over the last three months demonstrated by 5% outperformance versus their benchmark. Meanwhile, Harris have also outperformed year to date with a return of 26.1%, while Yackman who have a much more defensive approach have underperformed despite a strong gain of 22.4% over the period.
