■ Manager commentary

During October markets reversed a large part of the steep falls that have taken place in recent months. This recovery was supported by further dovish comments from the European Central Bank as well as the combination of an unexpected rate cut and a lowering of the required reserve ratio in China. Equities outperformed other asset classes with the MSCI World index gaining 7.9% in local currency terms. In the US, the 8.4% return for the S&P 500 index represented its largest gain since October 2011 and brought the index to within just 2% of its all-time high. In local currency terms, Continental European equities delivered a similar return of 8.2%, while Japan outperformed with a 10.9% gain and the UK lagged with a rise of 5.2%. Global emerging market equities gained 5.4% in local currency terms but a rebound in emerging market currencies led to a return of 7.1% in US dollar terms.

The Harmony US Dollar Growth Fund returned 6.3% in October net of all fees, reducing the year to date decline to 3.1%. We were rewarded for maintaining our positions through the volatility in recent months as the Fund's various equity holdings rebounded to drive performance in October. Indeed it was those holdings that fell the most during the third quarter that contributed the strongest returns last month, including the Harris Concentrated US Equity holding which gained 10.3% and outperformed the US market by approximately 2%. However several of the more defensive holdings, which had performed well in relative terms as markets fell in the third quarter, also performed surprisingly well in both absolute and relative terms in October. That included the Fund's listed infrastructure and listed real estate holdings which gained 6.7% and 5.1% respectively over the month. Also the Morgan Stanley Global Brands fund outperformed the MSCI World index by over 2%, largely on the back of strong performance from their large holding in Microsoft Corp.

The fixed income portion of the Fund was another strong contributor to returns, with upside of as much as 4.9% from global convertible bonds and 3.2% from hard currency emerging market debt. The other fixed income holdings, including investment grade and high yield credit, also posted positive returns which was a good outcome during a month when US Treasuries returned -0.4%. We continue to have no holdings in global (developed) government bonds: they are extremely expensive and over a reasonable time horizon we do not expect them to generate attractive risk adjusted returns. Instead the Fund has allocations to high yield, convertible and emerging market debt securities. While these assets are less protective in periods of acute market stress (such as the previous quarter) we believe that they offer a more attractive potential risk adjusted return in a modestly positive economic scenario.

While stability has returned to markets in October, the past few months are a reminder of the sorts of price moves that investment in securities markets provide from time to time. This volatility will continue along with sharp divergence of performance between countries, sectors and companies depending on fundamentals. We remain constructive on equity markets from here given the prospect of a continued, albeit subdued, recovery across the developed world together with interest rates at historically low levels; this provides a sound basis for growth in corporate earnings and support for equity markets. Nevertheless, in this uncertain world, prudent diversification and a focus on quality stocks, cash generation and strong balance sheets will continue to reward investors.
