■ Manager commentary

During July we made a slight adjustment to the asset allocation of the Portfolio, by resetting the strike level for our S&P 500 put option positions higher. Equity markets are up by nearly 50% from their lows in March and have made further gains since we initiated these options positions in May, meaning that the original holdings were out of the money and would provide less protection in the event of a correction. These positions allow us to retain our existing allocations to equities in the Portfolio, which we expect should deliver good returns on a medium-term view, whilst hedging away some of the shorter term downside risks.
